EUROPEAN CLOUDS ALARMING

Speculators Unwilling to Risk Unexpected Developments During Sunday Holiday.

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, June 24.—There was a full to-day in the activity of the operations for an advance in prices of stocks, which have been carried on through the week and the two hours' session of the Stock Exchange was rather quiet. A disposition was shown to reduce commitments in the market in view of the Sunday interval and the possibility of unexpected developments during the sus-pension of business. The clouds on the European political horizon accentuated this tendency. The wheat and cotton markets showed a yielding tendency and prospects of clearing and warmer weather in the wheat belt were regarded with satisfaction, but the commodilles markets also were affected by speculative realiz-ing incident to the closing of the week. The bank statement revealed a replenish-

The bank statement revealed a replenishment of reserves much larger than was anticipated, the increase in cash averages reaching $9.512,200. At the same time a $2,000,000 loan contraction operated to relieve the reserve requirement in proportion. The net result was to more than double the surplus, bringing it up to $15,094,675. The growing ease of the money market during the week was thus explained.

The total sales of stocks to-day amounted to 285,200 shares.

remanants of the crop in. There are very few of them who have more than a loar or two unsold. The stock selling is of medium character of fillers and wrappers that vary in price from 6 to 260. Prices are firm. The weather has been exceedingly hot this week, but has not injured/in any way the crop on the hill. The crop looks fairly well. Reports are to the effect that the planting is probably smaller than was at first reported. In Eastern North Carolina it is reported that too much rish has injured the crop somewhat. The stocks in the hands of the dealers are smaller than for many years. Trade is very quite in round lots.

Norfolk Peanut Market.

Norfolk Peanut Market.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

NORFOLK, VA., Tune 81.—The conditions are favorable to a greater crop of peanuts for the next season and for fewer factories and cleaners to contend for the purchase of the excess. The reasons for this are that the crop has not been all exhausted in the country, even at the high prices prevailing, and the factories have not succeeded in disposing of all of their plied-back stock. The plantiers will put in a greater acreage because the prices have been high for several seasons in succession and the growing of peanuts has been profitable. The factories, on the contrary, have no linentive to increase. There was probably to much of a factories, on the contrary, have no linentive to increase. There was probably to much of a factories, on the contrary, have no linentive to increase the season and the factories have not been at work continuities that the season and fast season and day, and the factories have not been at work continuously, one which burned ha not been rebuilt, a new one which is contemplated is not because the consumers have not been at work continuously, one which burned ha not been rebuilt, a new one which is contemplated is not because the consumers have not realized expectations. Thus while the farmers' stock of peanuts has commanded high prices for three seasons. Thus while the fart season and fast longits the second, the factories while disappointed the season. They have the peanuts instead of the profits. The factories fre disappointed has season, but the consumer will accept a horomal untilty because the price will be lowes to place a heavy duty of from 30 to 50 per cent on peanuts, to linerase the price time to compelled to buy peanuts instead of the profits. The protectionist, who wishes to place a heavy duty of from 30 to 50 per cent on peanuts, to linerase the price time to consumers, will find that the consumers will be demonstrated as the price of the profits. The protectionist, who wishes to place a heavy duty of from 30 to 50 per
